A Framework for Formation for Mission in Catholic Education
My mission of being in the heart of people is not just a part of my life or a badge I can take off; it is not an “extra” or just another moment in life. Instead, it is something I cannot uproot from my being without destroying my very self. I am a mission on this earth; that is the reason why I am here in this world. We have to regard ourselves as sealed, even branded, by this mission of bringing light, blessing, enlivening, raising up, healing and freeing.

(Pope Francis, Evangeli Gaudium, 273)
FOREWORD

As is well known, Catholic schools in Australia educate one in five Australian children. This is an extraordinary contribution to the social fabric of our society and one of the primary ways in which the Catholic Church seeks to play a constructive role in the Australian community.

Our schools are unapologetically Catholic in inspiration and in nature. We aim to provide the best education possible to every child who attends one of our schools. Believing as we do that, in the words of Gerald Manly Hopkins "the world is charged with the grandeur of God", we recognise that every aspect of human knowledge and activity, to the extent that it is truly human, reveals something of the mystery of God and of God’s creative intention for the world.

Because it is our firm intention to educate the whole person, and because we believe that education is for life and not just for a job, we also acknowledge and insist that an education which sidelines or excludes the mystery of God from consideration is an education which can only ever be less than complete. By leaving God out of the process, we are indeed selling our children and young people short and leaving them with a limited and distorted understanding of what it means to be a human person living his or her life to the full.

For the Catholic school to achieve its objectives, it needs people who are committed to this faith-filled vision, confident in their understanding of the Christian faith as it comes to expression in the Catholic tradition and eager to do their best to help their students grow in their own understanding of the presence of God at work in their lives. This Framework for Formation for Mission in Catholic Education has been developed to assist our teachers and other staff in their understanding of the awesome responsibility they have accepted, mindful of the old Latin tag: “nemo dat quod non habet” – no one can give what he or she doesn’t have.

On behalf of the Catholic bishops of Australia, I thank all those involved in the preparation of this important resource. May you be rewarded for your efforts by seeing our schools become more and more places where “the God thing” really matters.

RATIONALE

The National Catholic Education Commission publishes this document as a resource for educational leaders with responsibility for staff faith formation for the mission of Catholic education. This responsibility applies to the principals, leadership teams and school governance bodies of Catholic schools and to those with director, mission leadership, governance and formation roles in diocesan, religious institute and ministerial public juridic person entities and systems.

This framework is offered as a resource for the evaluation of current practice and strategic enhancement of formation for mission of leaders and staff in Australian Catholic schools and systems. There is a formative dimension to every aspect of Catholic schooling. Therefore, this document provides not only a framework for formation but an orientation for the whole life of a Catholic educational community. All members of the community can find themselves in this framework as it presents understandings that are fundamental to the formation of all individuals and communities, leaders, staff, parents and students.
Across Australia there are many committed, well-formed Catholic leaders and teachers playing an essential role in the mission of Catholic schools. There has been increasing strategic activity in forming leaders and staff for the mission of Catholic education. The spiritual journeys of school and educational office staff are individual and diverse. Some staff members have acquired theological and religious education qualifications, most meet accreditation requirements but the need for greater strategic focus on formation is increasingly apparent.

Bishops, diocesan education offices, religious institutes, public juridic persons and leaders at school level have identified the need for systematic, developmental and well-resourced programs for the evangelisation and spiritual growth of school, system and other community members as a priority.

While some dioceses, religious institutes and public juridic persons invest considerable resources in faith formation of staff, others require greater expertise and/or resources as they work towards providing comprehensive, systematic programs. Effective faith formation requires an organised and intentional approach, given the uneven levels of knowledge, experience and personal appropriation of the Church’s spiritual traditions and religious practices.
A VISION

I have come so that they may have life and have it to the full.

Jn 10:10

Catholic anthropology guides this framework for formation for mission. Catholic schooling repeatedly emphasises the need for an educational philosophy built on the foundation of a Catholic understanding of the human person. “The person of each individual human being is at the heart of Christ’s teaching; this is why the promotion of the human person is the goal of the Catholic school”.1 The Catholic school is committed to the education of the whole person since in Jesus Christ all human values find their fulfilment and unity: “herein lies the specific Catholic character of the school”.2 Christ is “the centre and fulcrum of the entire enterprise” and “the standard and measure of a school’s Catholicity”.3

This framework recognises parents as the first educators of their children. It affirms that Catholic schooling is a partnership with the home and the parish, the pre-eminent place of catechesis.4 It affirms the Christian vocation of educational leaders and teachers and their need for formation of the heart for it depends chiefly on them whether the Catholic school achieves its purpose.5 It recognises that school staff “who truly live their faith will be agents of a new evangelisation in creating a positive climate for the Christian faith to grow and in spiritually nourishing the students entrusted to their care”.6

The formation of the whole person recognises the innate dignity of the child and young person who is educated in the Catholic school. They “are the ones most receptive to the gift of God” and in “their openness and trust, they offer us a glimpse of what it is to be open to God”.7 Catholic anthropology demands that this framework supports all in the Catholic educating community in affirming the students’ inherent goodness in the image of God, developing their gifts to the fullest, and forming them as missionary disciples8 of Jesus. It calls on curriculum and pedagogies in which the learners are active participants who are engaging their whole person (“head, heart and hands”) in a systematic and critical synthesis of culture and faith, and of faith and life.9
A CATHOLIC UNDERSTANDING OF THE HUMAN PERSON

You have made us for yourself, and our heart is restless until it rests in you.
St Augustine, Confessions, 1.

The desire for God is written in the human heart because the human person is created by God and for God. The starting point for a Catholic understanding is that every human being is a person made in the image and likeness of God, hence human nature is essentially good. This is assured indisputably by the Incarnation, wherein the mystery of the Word made flesh the true meaning of the human person becomes clear. "The divine became human so that the human could become divine." The divine image is never lost, even by sin and the misuse of human freedom. Through the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, humanity is restored and the grace of salvation is offered to all men and women. As a result, a Catholic anthropology is shaped by hope in the mercy of God. No human person is ever self-sufficient but above all in relation to God, we are always in need of God's grace. The human person transformed by grace is animated by the theological virtues of faith, hope and charity.

In the Catholic understanding, the human person is a moral agent, an "acting subject" initiating and responsible for one's own actions and capable of repentance for sin and ongoing conversion in response to God's mercy. A Catholic theological anthropology rejects any notion of the person as a mere victim of fate. At the same time, as a mirror of the Trinity, the human person is essentially relational, finds God in and through others, and has an obligation to work for justice for all in the human community and to "care for our common home". In this it opposes excessive individualism. The Catholic understanding sees life as a gift from God that should be affirmed and defended for its essential dignity, and lived joyfully and hopefully in the promise of life with God for all eternity.
FORMATION FOR MISSION IN A FAITH COMMUNITY

The understanding of formation for mission in a faith community operative in this framework is as follows:

Faith formation of Catholic school community members is Christ-centred. It is an intentional, ongoing and reflective process that focuses on the growth of individuals and communities from their lived experiences, in spiritual awareness, theological understanding, vocational motivation and capabilities for mission and service in the Church and the world.
The worldwide picture of Catholicism has changed dramatically over the last century. There has been a global shift southwards. Whereas 100 years ago, 70 per cent of Catholics were in Europe and North America, now 70 per cent are in Latin America, Africa and Asia.

The growth in those continents has been paralleled by significant social, cultural and religious shifts in Western society, including Australia. There has been an erosion of tradition in religion and society accompanied by processes of increasing pluralisation and secularisation. Belief in meta-narratives is questioned and individuals are said to construct their own meaning in an autonomous and self-reliant manner. For many, religion is no longer the self-evident answer to human aspirations.

Even so, a desire for a life of meaning remains strong. Many people, particularly the young, who have abandoned institutional religion favour forms of spirituality that have been described as “being spiritual but not religious”. In this overall context, Catholic schools, school leaders, staff and students now increasingly choose to be Christian rather than living in a dominant Christian culture as a matter of course.

In the past, Catholic schools demonstrated their religious identity mainly by habit, traditional forms of piety, sacramental practice, family of origin and locality. The very tight and very visible Australian culture of parish and religious life has altered. Participation in Sunday Eucharist has declined significantly. While some adults in Catholic education continue to express elements of confessionality, the traditional notion of handing on faith in family, school and parish can no longer be presumed – either for students or for staff.

As Pope Francis has emphasised, these “vast and rapid cultural changes demand that we constantly seek ways of expressing unchanging truths in a language which brings out their abiding newness”. These renewed forms of expression arise from reflection and reinterpretation of the Catholic heritage in response to the signs of the times in order to re-present it to the next generation so that it also addresses their context and questions.
The formation and capabilities required for leaders and staff in Catholic education within this context speak to the very mission of the Church. Teachers and leaders need to know confidently where the Church comes from and where Catholicism stands as a faith tradition, and their place within it. This will enable them to sustain engagement with contemporary expressions of Catholicism and open dialogue with fellow staff and with students so that they too might experience them as meaningful for their lives.

The staff of Australian Catholic schools and systems come from a variety of backgrounds:

- Nationally, 80 per cent of primary school teachers and 61 per cent of secondary school teachers identify as Catholic.

- Some of these are engaged regularly in the worshipping community of a Catholic parish outside their school experience. Research in Western Australia shows that about 25 per cent of staff are in this category.\(^{18}\)

- Other research shows that these teachers have a strong sense of belonging to the Catholic Church and are most active in leadership and ministry roles in the parishes.\(^{19}\)

- Some staff have little familiarity with Catholic beliefs and values. For most staff, the Catholic school is their only regular experience of the mission and life of Catholicism. This includes the 29 per cent nationally who are not Catholic or whose religious affiliation is not recorded.

Several studies show a high degree of support among staff for the mission and identity of Catholic schools. The religious identity profile for Victorian teachers in Enhancing Catholic School Identity Project 2012 research shows that 96 per cent had faith in Christ, including 48 per cent who had strong faith in Christ. Furthermore, 94 per cent supported Catholic school identity or they “think it’s OK”.\(^{20}\)

The Western Australian research mentioned above was among 4,000 Catholic education staff and provided data on their differing faith formation needs. The survey sought to find out from staff what experiences nurture faith, what experiences detract staff from engaging in formational opportunities and what sorts of experiences they identify as needs in faith formation. The data revealed seven groupings or “faith segments” of staffs. Each “segment” has similar descriptive features, particularly with regards to enhancers, detractors and needs. It is clear that a critical aspect of integrated and systematic planning is to offer experiences for staff that equip them for mission in a way respectful of the diversity of their backgrounds and experiences.

SOME KEY PRINCIPLES FOR CATHOLIC FORMATION FOR MISSION

Catholic educators need a “formation of the heart”: they need to be led to that encounter with God in Christ which awakens their love and opens their spirits to others, so that their educational commitment becomes a consequence deriving from their faith, a faith which becomes active through love (cf. Gal 5:6)

(Educating Together in Catholic Schools, 25, cf Deus Caritas Est, 31)

Formation for mission is a process that is systematic, collaborative, graduated and ongoing. This process holds itself within relationships built on accompaniment centred on the self, others, creation and God.

Formation for mission in Catholic education:

1. Is “formation of the heart” that is characterised by prayerfulness and reflection.
2. Is respectful, experiential and relevant, building on participants’ personal story and everyday reality.
3. Is explicitly Christological, scripturally rich and ecclesially grounded.
4. Has an affective focus on a person’s faith journey and discipleship.
5. Has substantive theological content.
6. Sets out to build communal Catholic religious identity and culture.
7. Is differentiated according to individual and community needs.
8. Promotes personal vocation, connection with the Catholic tradition and responsiveness to mission.
9. Develops the willingness, confidence and capacities of participants in their roles to serve the evangelising mission of Catholic school education.
SOME KEY INTENTIONS

The Church will have to initiate everyone – priests, religious and laity – into this “art of accompaniment” which teaches us to remove our sandals before the sacred ground of the other (cf. Ex 3:5). The pace of this accompaniment must be steady and reassuring, reflecting our closeness and our compassionate gaze which also heals, liberates and encourages growth in the Christian life.

Pope Francis, Evangelii Gaudium, 169

The intention of formation for mission is to enable:

- deeper faith relationships with God, Church, self, others and creation
- greater engagement between individuals’ lives marked by “accompaniment” in the service of others
- a culture of dialogue
- stronger commitment to the ministry of teaching and parenting
- a deeper call into missionary discipleship.
These intentions come to life when formation for mission is a key strategic priority in school and system leadership and governance. They would be evident when there are systematic, differentiated formation opportunities provided by schools and systems with accountability identified in school and system annual plans, budgets and review and school improvement cycles. At the level of the individual leaders or members of staff, there would be inclusion of formation in annual professional goals, widespread participation and positive evaluation data on its impact on them as individuals and in their ministry in Catholic education.
DESIGNING AND FACILITATING FORMATION

Formation takes many forms, operating in diverse situations, both formal and informal, with a range of subjects. At times, it may be integrated with staff professional learning. Often it has a facilitator or formator; sometimes it does not. There is a range of processes for formation and there is no one way of designing it. However, there are certain fundamental considerations.

The participants are the key resource in formation. The program facilitator or formator is not bringing God to people, for God is already there. Each person’s life is sacred and their life experiences already contain the story of life, death and resurrection.

Formation builds on the experience of the participants through processes of input, reflection, sharing and application. The facilitator does not know everything but instead lets the process, participants and Holy Spirit do the work.

Each aspect or session of formation builds on the past and has a context ahead, so each aspect or session builds into the next. This reflective, developmental process enables participants to apply the experience to their everyday life and their ministry in Catholic education.
A man planted a vineyard and leased it to tenant farmers and went into a far country for a long time.

When the season for the produce of the vineyard came, he sent his servants to the tenants to get his share of the produce of the vineyard.

But the farmers seized his servants, treated them shamefully, and sent them away empty-handed.

Again he sent other servants, but they were treated in the same way.

Then he sent his own son to them, thinking, “They will respect my son.”

When the farmers saw the son, they said among themselves, “This is the heir. Come, let us kill him and seize his estate.”

So they seized him out of hand and killed him. What then will the owner of the vineyard do? He will come and destroy those farmers and give the vineyard to others.

Have you not read this scripture, ‘The stone that the builders rejected has become the cornerstone’? This was done both to you and to us, that a fair and just service might be offered to God.

And they said to him, “Then why do they do this thing?”

He said to them, “Do you not see all these things? If God so feeds the birds of the air, how will he not provide for you, O you of little faith?”

So when the crowd heard this, they were astonished at his teaching.

Then he said to them, “Do you not understand this scripture, ‘Out of the mouth of infants and of nursing infants you have prepared praise’? Amen, I say to you, whoever receives one such child in my name receives me, and whoever receives me receives not me but the one who sent me.”

Then they came to Jerusalem, and in the temple he made a statement and said, “By what authority are you doing these things?”

And the chief priests and the scribes answered him, “Give an answer to them according to your authority.”

Then Jesus answered them, “I will ask you one question; answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

Did the baptism of John come from heaven or was it of human origin? Answer me.”

They argued among themselves, “If we say, ‘From heaven,’ he will say, ‘Why then did you not believe him?’

But if we say, ‘Of human origin,’ we fear the populace, for all hold John as a prophet.”

So they answered Jesus and said, “We do not know.”

And Jesus said to them, “Neither will I tell you by what authority I am doing these things.”
CONCLUSION

We have come to believe in God’s love: in these words the Christian can express the fundamental decision of his life. Being Christian is not the result of an ethical choice or a lofty idea, but the encounter with an event, a person, which gives life a new horizon and a decisive direction.

Pope Benedict XVI, Deus Caritas Est, 1

The National Catholic Education Commission encourages those with responsibilities for the formation of leaders and staff in Catholic education to reflect on this document and share it as a resource for the evaluation of current practice and as an enabler of ongoing development of systematic formation of leaders and staff that equips them for the mission of Catholic education.
